NOW MORE THEN EVER

We're spending time at home...

That means we're all treating our homes with a little extra care. From a safe environment to a place to entertain and connect, the home is our solace, providing comfort from a rather challenging world. So, choosing the right products to elevate those feelings is vital. Design, functionality, craftsmanship, all key focal points in this era of home becoming "home base".

With utmost admiration, we see you, the trade professional, with your tireless dedication to serving not only your own clients, but your artistic expression as well; we look to you as a fellow collaborator. In addition to remodeling several of our showrooms this year, we're expanding upon ways to make you and your clients' lives as simple and safe as possible with virtual consultations via phone, video, and online chat, as well as the expansion of our in-home design managers throughout Southern California.

This book comes to you with the hope of serving and inspiring your next project, no matter how simple or intricate it may be. We thank our friends, partners, manufacturers, and everyone else who played a part in this, a now evergreen capsule of assortments from our timeless collection of brands.

From entry level to luxury, Pacific Sales remains a key ingredient in the recipe for inspiration.

Lets Get CONNECTED

SINCE INCEPTION,

Pacific Sales' goal, first and foremost, has been to enrich the lives of our clients. We've seen mere dreams bloom into full-blown realities all from the shared perspective, both client and brands alike, to achieve whatever is possible and more.

This continuation of work has seen a myriad of transformations, namely the resurgence of innovations in the technology landscape. With the rapid incorporation of more custom-focused systems, there can definitely be a moment of disconnect.

How can new technology elevate my current experience? What can these new systems do for me? What possibilities even exist today?

It can be plain daunting approaching these questions when the capabilities themselves are so new and vast. Luckily, Pacific Sales is prepared to not only educate, but excite and inspire on these fresh-facing innovations.

Michael Rhodes, senior director of Pacific Sales, believes technology in the home needs to be a blend of purpose and intuition.

"Having smart devices with apps to control every appliance is not enough. Technology for the sake of technology is neither helpful nor fun and can be downright frustrating."

The solution to this frenzied feeling, according to Rhodes, lies in the ways technology creates solutions.

"Technology means better performance—keeping foods fresher longer in the kitchen, or creating your own personal spa with a steam shower, aromatherapy and chromotherapy," says Rhodes. "And for others, solutions come in the form of sustainability, with using less energy and water."

Creating solutions, even unforeseen upon initial glance, is the future of this in-home technology. No matter the narrative of a client, they come to the experts with prospects in hand.

At times this need is aesthetics-leading with technology expected to work behind the scenes.

Rhodes reinforces the diversity these new possibilities bring to the design-focused clientele. "Many [clients] that are building or remodeling want brands where technology shows up as both artwork and function."

Brands not only recognize this expectation, but deliver with customization never-before executed at such a high level. Tucked away and cleverly hidden, many systems now lead with aesthetics first, accomplishing designerly feats while the accompanying tech remains uncompromised.

However your journey leads to these more connected systems, take comfort in knowing any sort of apprehension in this connected world is not only welcome, but expected!

"There is nothing wrong with being 'old school' or a 'purest' in the tech space," says Rhodes. The beauty of having at-home quandaries is the education piece that comes as readily available (see page 7) as are the assortments themselves.

"No project for your home, kitchen or bath proves too big or too small. Whether a simple doorbell install for a condo or an elaborate, integrated home induction, we have design managers prepared to serve from inspiration to realization."

So let your mind wander, dare to dream of the possibilities. Lend a moment of curiosity to exciting, tech-focused capabilities of the modern world. Invite these systems into your space and leave the hectic of the outside world at the door.

Many [clients] that are building or remodeling want brands where technology shows up as both artwork and function.

Inside your Smart Home

A premium smart home integrates every aspect of your home into one easy-to-control ecosystem. Control your lights, home entertainment system, thermostat, window blinds, garage door, doorbell and so much more, all together, with the Savant app on your smartphone, tablet or smart home control pad. It's as easy as pushing one button to bring your entire home to life or turning everything off at the end of the day. Let us show you what's possible.

With a premium smart home, you can create scenes. With a push of a button, you can hit "Welcome Home." With this simple command, select lights come on, the thermostat adjusts to a predetermined temperature, your TV will come on to a specific channel and the window blinds will open. Use your voice, an app on your phone or the touchscreen on your wall.

In a time of both obstacles and triumphs, the hectic of the day can still be silenced, if only for a moment, when dinner is served. With more time at home to both prepare and enjoy our meals, a new era for culinary connoisseurs has arrived.

Culture, and the balance between Cooking

No longer just a mere tool for nourishment, food now educates, evokes nostalgia and imbues us with tales from across the globe. This lovely mix of experimentation and cultural infusion now graces the dinner table more frequently than ever.

Cultural representation within the kitchen space is no new concept. For the span of time humans shared this planet, meal preparation and social influence have been caught in a dance that spans generations. The initial practice of harvesting available resources for meals opened the door to a plethora of unique flavors and preparation processes.

Foods became crafted and honed, perfected to pass down via tradition. But through both technology and word-of-mouth, the information age allowed the further sharing of these recipes, with exclusivity transforming into celebration.

In the modern world, observing ethnicity through the dishes we make comes streamlined in the appliances we invite into our homes. The technological forces driving this innovation leaves much to be desired when meal preparation begins.

And who better to discuss the power behind this idea of kitchen inclusion than renowned chef, interior designer and Viking brand ambassador Jaime Laurita. (ctd. on 87)

PACIFIC SALES®
KITCHEN & HOME

A Best Buy Company

With countless experiences and resulting lessons surrounding culture, Laurita notes representation in the culinary space is key.

"Giving a voice to these places [around the world] through cuisine has always been the goal," says Laurita when challenged with the high demand that can arise from catering to all walks of life.

A notable pioneer in this representative space is the kitchen powerhouse Viking, serving a smorgasbord of clientele for over 30 years. Laurita compares just how far brands have come to serving us in the kitchen space, recalling his childhood years of chopping carrots in his family.

"Growing up in a home with deep-rooted Italian influence, I've known firsthand the power that cultural impact has within the dish you're preparing."

"The culmination of ingredients, how they were treated, how they surrendered to the stovetop or oven—all these pieces reinforced the ways our Italian heritage could come to life."

Laurita grew up and into this practice of cooking, relying on all parts of the process to work harmoniously, resulting in true, Italian cooking.

"Knowing how the food will react with the appliances unlocks the possibilities moving forward with every dish you're preparing," says Laurita. "This means that woks and griddles should be able to reach and maintain pinpointed heat levels or cooking and serving racks stay large enough to fit sizeable dishes."

Laurita also touches on Viking's arsenal of modern features, from the ranges of efficient ventilation systems to the smart home features—all intended to serve the client in their cooking ambitions.

Designing with culture in mind not only satisfies customer need, but surpasses expectations and even leaves the consumer with a newfound confidence, having familiar tools in their kitchen "toolbelt".

"This way of 'showing up' for our clients allows a release of energy," says Laurita.

Energy is another driving force behind culture immersion, created through the magic within a bustling kitchen space.

The exchange of recipes, not only just the physical foods themselves, but the stories behind them crafts that energy. Laurita encourages all of us to "take what's in your soul and succumb to the reckless abandon of the kitchen".

But to truly represent a culture, the assortment used needs to understand the cuisine.

The practice of submitting to what the kitchen has to teach proves gratifying in completely new ways. The surrendering of time to learn fresh, exciting methods through ingredients and history alike holds so much potential.

Laurita notes that now, especially with being so sequestered to the home, is indeed the perfect time to let yourself wander during your cooking process.

“Food will never stop being an outlet for us, giving us permission to get a little lost, while always staying grounded.

Jaimie Laurita

COLOR comes home

Color engulfs our surroundings, and whether we know it or not, is a mighty tool used for all sorts of expression, especially home design.

THE practice of encapsulating color and delivering it into a newly designed space seems almost religious, inviting a unique narrative into the walls of your home.

Picking and choosing what hues belong within a space depends on some key factors. How these colorways make us feel, how they tell a story, how certain hues embrace cultural history, and many more facets.

To feel truly informed when it comes to color integration, Pacific Sales took to the experts on this matter, the iconic family House of Rohl.

We invited Brian Dunn, regional sales manager, to shed a little light on the quite literal shades of light (and dark!) that are color palettes.

"[Color] historically has proven time and time again that people are naturally drawn to certain schemes that spark their own lived experiences," says Dunn.

This can come from positive, nostalgia-driven times in our lives where even our subconscious associates feelings toward color, even if we can't place those instances.

For many of us, warmer colors like red, orange and yellow emit feelings of autumn foliage, sunrises and sets, passion and energy that we wish to harbor and invite into a safe space. Cooler colors like blue and green are often considered more subdued, imitating evening landscapes and quiet, tranquil sentiments.

So for some, looking at a sun-kissed accent wall may bring memories of summer skies and breezy mornings. But in others the same wall could harbor reservations of unease and distrustful energies.

How do we serve these customers, where traditional color schemes aren't their cup of tea?

The answer lies in-between; we go neutral. Investing in less color and more neutral tones is a simple solution if color deems too busy or complex. Neutral tones serve as the perfect backdrop in a space, creating an initial playground for other color experimentation. This opens the door to more gradual color introduction and takes the pressure off the space as a whole.

Brian comments on this aspect, lending to the diverse assortment of accent colors House of Rohl carries. (ctd. on 123)

PACIFIC SALES
KITCHEN & HOME
A Best Buy Company

"[Rohl] offers over 190 RAL color variations in the assortments we have, solving this exact problem of neutral choices versus something more vibrant."

Many brands think with this inclination in mind as well, working to cater each, individual preference. The more customization offered, the wider the net brands cast.

Along with basic preference, a cultural spin on colorways proves equally important.

"If we think about the color white, to us in Western culture, it's a fresh beginning," says Dunn. "A clean slate...but in Eastern culture, white is a symbol of mourning, and must be represented equally in our products."

The sales manager refers back to the importance of color diversification. In today's age of accessibility, it would seem foolish to not offer such a myriad of color representation. With customization not only available but now expected, the use of color in design has no choice but to expand.

The importance of how we navigate the colorways of a space cannot be understated. We as human beings harbor an innate pull toward that which gives us emotion. We seek to embrace our emotion through this expression of color.

Whether bold and decisive, soothing or even plain and simple, invite color into your home with open eyes.

“ [Color] historically has proven time and time again that people are naturally drawn to certain schemes that spark their own lived experiences.

Live small think Big

IN a competitive landscape of architectural aspirations and real estate rivalry, the quest for a plot of property to call our own is no new concept. But the size of such spaces has experienced quite a culture shift of recent years.

It's arguably a trend that not only gained momentum, but fully impacted the way both the trade industry and brands alike prepare to serve their customers.

This is, of course, the art of tiny living.

Some would call this a mere trend. Others define tiny living as a way of life, embracing the challenges of slightly smaller, more intimate spaces to decorate, live and thrive within.

For these clients, showing up to support this lifestyle is more important than ever, given the heavy shift toward this practice.

Pacific Sales sat down (virtually of course) with Rachel Alesescu, brand manager at Thermador, to delve deeper into the possibilities being unlocked by brands for this tiny-living mindset.

According to Alesescu, spaces today must absolutely be prepared to host any array of functions.

"There's nothing more powerful than mastering the use of your space," says Alesescu.

"People want to see themselves in their space and in the products they use, and [tiny living] has always existed, but the strategies to feel 'at home' in these places have changed."

Take the kitchen, for example. In this down-sized state of mind, the kitchen must be prepared to serve, not only as a chef's playground, but shift on a dime into an entertainment zone with ample room to move and groove with guests. And when bulky appliances muddy up the area with unforeseen clutter, obstacles arise.

But for every challenge, brands step up to answer, with distinct assortments to combat tiny constraints. Thermador, since inception, has carved out a specific niche for this type of compact living, harboring assortments with smaller sizes for when this type of customer comes knocking. (ctd. on 142)

PACIFIC SALES®
KITCHEN & HOME

Alesescu says creativity will save the day here as well, with tricks like utilization of under-the-counter installation or even built-in wall appliances to fit even better in the home.

For example, when the fridge won't fit in that corner, opt in for a split-column model to satisfy both the space constraints and your food storage capacity.

"Design has always been a core pillar of how we do things," says Alesescu when asked about Thermador's servitude to their customers in thinking creatively.

But when using the term "design", in this smaller-living landscape, another facet is considered – the aesthetics of the products themselves. If the look of particular appliances fit your style, making them work in your space is much easier.

This means custom paneling, colorway choices, and finishes become key players, adding more diversity to where they'll live in the home. The right look has potential to work anywhere. So that beautifully wood-paneled coffee machine can fully thrive in any corner of the room and no one is the wiser.

How each of us chooses to live within our four walls may be different, but the goal is universal. The value of a comfortable, clean space cannot be understated and thankfully the consumer no longer needs to suffer over space constraints. As innovation continues to pioneer solutions, we are free to take ownership of our homes, no matter how tiny.

Inside your Media Room

They call it a family room for a reason. It's the place where everyone comes together to watch the Big Game or the latest blockbuster, to listen to music, or just to hang out. Give everyone a reason to come together with the finest in audio and video gear that blends perfectly into your home's décor.

The right technology should enhance your space, not detract from it. That's why we offer the assistance of Designers who are not only experts in the latest home entertainment gear, but know how to make it integrate perfectly into your home's design and décor.

There are two schools of thought when it comes to integrating technology into a home—you either want to show it off, or you want it hidden so the room's natural design is the star of the show. Thankfully, we offer speakers and TVs that can deliver both. From the exceptional designs of our floorstanding speakers from brands like KEF, MartinLogan and Bowers & Wilkins, to architectural speakers that nearly disappear, the choice is yours.
